

What if my Facebook got hacked and they changed the email and password? ((Facebook Hacked))

Go to facebook.com/hacked and select the 'My login info was changed'. You'll need to supply any previous email, phone number or name you have used, or name of a friend on your friend list.

If your Facebook account was hacked and the hacker changed both the email address and password, you can still try to recover it, but you need to act quickly. Start by going to Facebook's account recovery page and choose the option that says your account was compromised or you can't access it. This tells Facebook that someone else took control of your account.

When prompted, enter the email address or phone number you originally used to create the account, even if it has been changed. Facebook may show you recovery options, such as sending a verification code to your old email or asking security questions. If Facebook detects recent changes, it may offer a link that says "Secure your account" or allow you to revert recent email changes.

If you no longer have access to any listed contact information, Facebook may ask you to verify your identity by uploading a government-issued ID. This process can take several days but often helps restore access. While waiting, check your email inbox (including spam) for any messages from Facebook about recent changes, as these emails sometimes include a "This wasn't me" link.

Once you regain access, immediately change your password, update your email, enable two-factor authentication, and review recent activity and connected apps. Also secure your email account and scan your device for malware to prevent future hacks.

When Facebook disables an account after detecting unusual logins, it's a security measure to protect your data. To resolve this, use the official appeal process via Facebook's Help Center. Verify your identity by submitting requested documents. Avoid using third party apps or browsers that may trigger security flags.

Facebook likely disabled your account after a hack to protect users from abuse, as hackers often post spam, scams, or illegal content, triggering automated security systems that lock the account for your own safety and to prevent further harm; you need to use the official Meta/Facebook Help Center to prove your identity and regain control by completing the recovery process, 1-855-554-6665 which often involves submitting an ID and changing your password.
